

Allowing BellSouth's petition to deregulate broadband service is anathema to the stability of the internet. It could potentially damage the small independent internet service providers who attract as users more open minded, technically proficient people who are the guardians of the internet as compared to the World Wide Web's large ISPs that are the mainstay and source of virtually all the spam, hackers and junk that permeates the internet. I have had prior service with a large ISP (Comcast) and have been subject to their inefficiencies as compared to the small ISP (Sonic) i have now that provides superior service. If BellSouth needs a little more "wiggle" room to make their service efficient and profitable, thats fine because profitable businesses are good for America. Just dont give them unregulated decision making ability. They cant be trusted to act in the peoples best interests.
